Bereavement Research into Practice

12 March 2018, 10.30 – 16.00, London

New developments in bereavement research are expanding our understanding of what it means to be bereaved and what can help in times of grief. Researchers, practitioners and policymakers need to share insights and generate ideas together to make sure that research informs practice, and that practice helps identify the next generation of research questions.

Join us for a day of learning and networking for bereavement researchers and practitioners, with a focus on Carers and Bereavement. The seminar will be a chance for bereavement researchers to share their findings with practitioners, and for practitioners to help shape the future of bereavement research, across sociology, psychology and other disciplines. Presenters will reflect on aspects of the research process, sharing insights from their current projects. Presentations will include:

- Helping carers identify the support they need using the Carer Support Needs Assessment Tool (CSNAT) Dr Gail Ewing, University of Cambridge
- The bereavement experiences of lesbian, gay, bisexual and/or trans people who have lost a partner Dr Steve Marshall, King's College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust and Dr Katherine Bristowe, Cicely Saunders Institute
- Examining preparation for end of life and grief before death amongst family carers of people with dementia Dr Kirsten Moore, University College London

Attendees of previous meetings have said:

'Strong focus on bereavement research from planning, design, delivery & results. A small number of speakers who could share their research in depth was great.'

'Some very helpful practical advice for research & inspirational ideas. Varied yet complementary topics.'
